

WILLIAMS LAKE AGENCY

DETAILED REPORT

WILLIAMS LAKE AGENCY

Field work in the Williams Lake Agency continued from the 15th until the 27th July, 1914, the examination of Mr. Agent Ogden occupying the period of October 23rd to 27th of the same year.

In this Agency peculiar conditions present themselves, the Williams Lake (Cariboo) country being a region of immense arid and semi-arid areas, the soil in the main of good quality but partial or entire lack of water rendering its utilization difficult and costly, where at all possible. Irrigation is—until dry farming methods are more generally understood and practised and their possibilities demonstrated—a first necessity, and in the case of the 62,330.77 acres of Indian Reserve lands allotted by former Commissions, only a very small proportion is cultivable within the means of the Indians, while the dry range affords so little sustenance that fifty acres are estimated by the Agent to be, on the average, necessary for the maintenance of each head of stock.

On only two of the 64 established Reserves the Commission found land in excess of the requirements of the Indians, one Reserve being cut off as altogether unused and one reduced in area as being disproportionate in extent to the Indian necessities, a reduction in total of 1,490 acres for the Agency resulting. At the same time the Commission has endeavoured to provide other lands more suitable for agricultural utilization and range purposes, in order that the Williams Lake Agency Indians may become in larger measure self-maintaining, with the result that 29 new Reserves have been created, having an aggregate area of 12,167 acres, or a net increase in acreage for the Agency of 10,677 acres.

The Agency having an Indian population of 1,248 these allowances will give a future per capita of 58.56, in comparison with a former Agency per capita of 49.94 acres of land of all classes, which on account of these Indians being chiefly engaged in stock-raising is well within the measure of their reasonable requirement.
