Mandate

- ▶ In 1991, as part of its response to the events at Kanesatake/Oka, the government established the ICC by Order in Council as an independent advisory body to:
 - ◆ Hold public inquiries (under the Inquiries Act) into specific claims that have been rejected by the government or where there is disagreement regarding compensation criteria;
 - ◆ Provide mediation to help First Nations and government to reach claim settlements.
- ▶ Before the creation of the ICC, First Nations were unable to challenge government decisions without going to court. The Indian Claims Commission has offered an alternative approach for First Nations who desire an independent review of government decisions.
- ▶ Commission work is carried out on the basis of Canada's Specific Claims Policy.
- ▶ Presently 5 part-time Commissioners (including Chief Commissioner) appointed by federal government; 51 staff.

Inquiry Process

- ▶ After the Minister of INAC decides to accept or reject a claim, First Nations can request an inquiry when:
 - ◆ The Minister has rejected their claim; or
 - ◆ The Minister has accepted the claim, but there is a disagreement over compensation criteria.
- ▶ Inquiries follow a well established and accepted process (see following page).

Inquiry Process

A First Nation writes to the Commission to request an inquiry. The Commission assesses the claim and makes a decision to accept or deny the request.

Preparation for Inquiry

- ▶ Once the decision to accept the request has been made, the Commission brings representatives of the First Nation and government together face-to-face to discuss the rejected claim, plan research, clarify legal issues.

Community Session

- ▶ Commissioners visit the First Nation to hear oral testimony from elders and other community members.

Written and Oral Submissions

- ▶ Lawyers for the First Nation and government provide submissions on facts and law.

Final Inquiry Report

- ▶ Based on the evidence presented, Commissioners release their findings and recommendations to the federal government, the First Nation, and the public.

Mediation Process

- ▶ At any stage in the specific claims process, the Commission may, by mutual agreement of the parties, offer mediation services:
 - ◆ at any stage in the review process at the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs, including before the acceptance or rejection of the claim.
 - ◆ at any stage in the Commission's inquiry process, in order to assist the parties to resolve their differences.
 - ◆ at any stage of negotiations between the First Nation and the government, in order to assist the parties to find a mutually acceptable settlement, including coordination of joint studies that may be required for the resolution of the claim.

Mediation Process

A First Nation and Canada jointly write to the Commission to request its mediation services.

Preparation for Mediation

- ▶ The Commission reviews the claim and brings representatives of the negotiating parties together face-to-face to discuss the issues and terms of the negotiation and mediation protocol agreements.

Negotiation Process

- ▶ The Commission facilitates discussions on any issue, including compensation, assists the parties by coordinating the gathering of information including land appraisals and joint loss of use studies, and monitors the parties' decisions and undertakings.

Settlement

- ▶ After the negotiating parties reach an agreement in principle, lawyers for the First Nation and Canada work together to draft a final settlement agreement which is initialed by the negotiators and ratified by both parties.

Final Mediation Report

- ▶ The Commission reports to the federal government, the First Nation and the public on the outcome of the negotiation.

Guiding Principles

- ▶ Independence and Impartiality
- ▶ Fairness and natural justice
- ▶ Openness and transparency
- ▶ Importance of oral history
